
time zones

Geschrieben von Papa Dru - 19.06.2012 08:10

Hey there fellow racers

Im a new-be and am wanting to join for some clean, fun racing but am wondering what time zones do I work off to know when the races are on as I am from Australia.

Thanks for help revheads!!:dry: :ohmy: :blink:

=====

Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von DFAlex - 19.06.2012 08:45

Hello dude,
welcome to the green "Bude"..
I'm pretty sure the most people here around are from Europe...so the time zone should be GMT+/-1h...
For me, i'm from Germany, it's 08:45h at morning, where the most at work or in school...i had nightshift...so i'm here for a while ;)

regards
Alex

=====

Re:Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von Papa Dru - 19.06.2012 11:17

:woohoo:

THANKS SO MUCH!!!

=====

Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von MRecke - 19.06.2012 12:08

Gday Mate,

great welcome in the Bude community.

The events reces on here are allways one day a week at around 8pm GMT+1. Other than that there is allways people having fun in short races all day long.

It's good to have some Aussis on here because we all know that "the german" is a bit faster.
:lol:

hehe

PS:
where about in Australia do you live?

=====

Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von 747Pilot - 19.06.2012 15:42

sorry M8tes but thats not really correct!

GMT is an old definition for what called UTC now!

Universal Time Coordinated.

And during the "Summertime" period, between March and October, here in western Europe the difference is 2 hours from UTC away. Only during winter (between last Octoberweekend and March) the difference is only 1 hour from UTC.

So far for now so you had to look for what timezone you are living in down under...and calculate a bit.

regards Dirk - !Dick

=====

Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von DFAlex - 19.06.2012 19:06

747Pilot schrieb:

sorry M8tes but thats not really correct!

GMT is an old definition for what called UTC now!
Universal Time Coordinated.

And during the "Summertime" period, between March and October, here in western Europe the difference is 2 hours from UTC away. Only during winter (between last Octoberweekend and March) the difference is only 1 hour from UTC.

So far for now so you had to look for what timezone you are living in down under...and calculate a bit.

regards Dirk - !Dick

...sry Dirk, ich bin alt...

<http://smilie-land.de/t-t-v/verneigen/verneigen0010.gif>

=====

Re:time zones

Geschrieben von MoeZee - 19.06.2012 19:41

greetings

For me living in Canada, i used this site for quick time conversions.

<http://www.timezoneconverter.com/cgi-bin/tzc.tzc>

=====

Aw: Re:time zones

Geschrieben von 747Pilot - 19.06.2012 20:29

fine site MoeZee...and important for our friend in Australia if you had also summer and winter-time as we here in Europe, the starttimes differ up to 2 hours.

WeÂ'll start 99,99% of the Events at 20:00 localtime Germany as on the website published unfortunately may be 04:00 in the morning if you live in Sydney and 02:00 in the night if you live in Perth

greetz Dirk

=====

Re:Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von Geedee - 21.06.2012 12:40

747Pilot wrote:

sorry M8tes but thats not really correct!

GMT is an old definition for what called UTC now!
Universal Time Coordinated.

And during the "Summertime" period, between March and October, here in western Europe the difference is 2 hours from UTC away. Only during winter (between last Octoberweekend and March) the difference is only 1 hour from UTC.

So far for now so you had to look for what timezone you are living in down under...and calculate a bit.

regards Dirk - !Dick

Tut tut Dirk m8y... here in the UK we are always 1 hour behind you in time all year long... on track though we are in front :woohoo: :P

=====

Aw: Re:Aw: time zones

Geschrieben von 747Pilot - 21.06.2012 15:45

Geedee schrieb:

.... on track though we are in front :woohoo: :P

so..... Gee my friend..... weÂ'll see

:evil:

regards Dirk

=====